Liberia's Future.

In the petitions for aid which come from Liberia and to which our government is apaprently little disposed to respond, one of the chief plaints is as to the danger of the absorption of the African republic by France and Great Britain. Is this really a danger? Would Liberia, now bankrupt and suffering from industrial paralysis, have anything to lose by being taken under the wing of either or both of these progressive nations, which have a direct interest in African development? Should this come to pass it is a question if Uncle Sam would not feel rather relieved than otherwise, Having no inclination to go to the rescue himself, to supply Liberia with capital which the Liberians could not intelligently use, and to saddle himself with the responsibility of that artificial republic, why should he object to the absorption of the Liberian burden by other powers, the humanity and the progressive designs of which are not to be questioned? However, it is idle to discuss this matter until there is more positive knowledge that a European protectorate over Liberia is actually contemplated. — Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.
